

TUGBOAT CAPTAIN CAPTURES AN AMAZING 'SIDEWAYS TORNADO' PHOTO

He's worked on the water in Baltimore for 30 years, and he's always aware of the weather, but he's never seen anything quite like what he saw recently. Ron Matz has more on a tugboat captain who captured an amazing moment with his cell phone.

"We get all four different seasons and we get a lot of pictures that yourself and other people can't get because we're out when the bad storms are coming in.

Thank God for the smart phones because we get better shots now," said Tony Roman, tugboat captain. It's an unforgettable image captured on a cell phone. Tugboat captain Tony Roman took the amazing picture as his tug was leaving the Dundalk Marine Terminal.

"I looked out the window and when I looked at it, it looked like a tornado, but it was sideways. I've never seen anything like it," Roman said.

Roman calls it the sideways tornado, something he's never seen before. "We get a lot of shots like that but that was a rare shot," Roman said.

Roman snapped a storm hovering over the Key Bridge. He's also captured some beautiful sunsets. "We're always looking for the weather. We kind of see it before anybody else sees it coming in," he said.

Many hours working on the water in Baltimore, from Canton to Dundalk and beyond. Now thanks to his cell phone, a memory for ages. "It looks like a professional shot, but it's not. I just do it for a hobby when I'm not there, kind of have some memories when I retire," Roman said.
